Dear Mr. Candidate:

There are a surprising amount of human trafficking goes through the US, and something needs to be done to stop them. The current actions to stop these operations include the police force, FBI, and other law enforcement agencies. There needs to be something else implemented to increase effectiveness and to let the other law enforcement agencies focus on other areas that need their attention.

To fix the problem of human trafficking a new police department needs to be put in place that specializes in stopping human trafficking operations. There is a startup cost that would be implemented into the tax costs. The total amount per person would be around 32 cents per person, making it a reasonable amount. This new police department would have personal buildings that would resemble office buildings with the main use to research possible human trafficking operations. There would also be a hiring period for staff of these new departments with a wide opening of jobs. The main goal of this new department is to specialize in finding and stopping human trafficking operations. The goal is to have a major improvement in effectiveness which will lead to less activity in the human trafficking front.

In conclusion, the new law enforcement department would increase effectiveness and the startup is reasonable. This new department would also open job opportunities to the general public, boosting the economy. Lastly, this new department would be able to find new tactics to stop more human trafficking operations which can be used in different departments not just the specialized department. Overall, this new department is a great idea to stop and prevent human trafficking operations.

Sincerely,

Zachary Marvin
